Television programs directed for the Belgische Radio en Televisie (BRT) network from the 1960s to the 1990s in collaboration with ARGOS – Centre for Art and Media (Brussels). Five programmes featuring 26 films playing continuously on two monitors presented in the Gallery vestibule during the summer.

Jef Cornelis is a Belgian director of a vast number of films and programs for the Flemish Belgian Radio Television network (BRT—now the VRT).¹ From 1964 to 1996, he directed more than 100 films on a broad array of topics related to the areas of contemporary culture and art, Flemish landscape and architecture, literature and music. These films and programs are compelling to us today for their experimentation with the televisual format, technique and style, their choice of subject matter and in the way debate and conflict played out. Indeed, many are outrightly prescient. This is all the more surprising for a contemporary viewer, in that they were all produced by a public television network and not independently, something that would be unthinkable today.

PUTTING REHEARSAL TO THE TESTS

A three-part exhibition organized by The Leonard & Bina Ellen Art Gallery, SBC Gallery of Contemporary Art and VOX, centre de l'image contemporaine
Artists: Martin Beck, Rainer Bellenbaum, Merlin Carpenter, Harun Farocki, Marie Claire Forté and Alanna Kraaijeveld in dialogue with Sophie Bélair Clément, Hanako Geierhos, Richard Ibghy & Marilou Lemmens, On Kawara, Krüger & Pardeller, Achim Lengerer, minimal club, Regina (Maria) Möller, Yoko Ono, Falke Pisano, Constanze Ruhm, Klaus Scherübel, Wendelien van Oldenborgh et Katarina Zdjelar

Curators: Sabeth Buchmann, Ilse Lafer and Constanze Ruhm

While the subject of 'rehearsal' is popular in film and theatre, as well as in the fine arts, it has been scarcely considered in historical and contemporary art discourses. It is with this in mind that the exhibition Putting Rehearsals to the Test investigates the role and function of the notion of "rehearsal," understood as a methodology, a modus operandi, a medium, a site of representation and reflection for artistic production processes.

Putting Rehearsals to the Test, was a major event in three venues and accompanied by a film program presented at VOX. The three curators of the exhibition, Sabeth Buchmann, Ilse Lafer, and Constanze Ruhm, brought together over fifty international artists who addressed a set of positions and strategies in contemporary art that consider rehearsal as both subject and practice.

Ellen Art Gallery, Concordia University

In advance of the opening of Putting Rehearsals to the Test, artist Achim Lengerer animated a ten-day workshop from at the Gallery as part of his ongoing Scriptings series.

A travelling showroom and publishing house, Scriptings provides a forum for artists, writers, graphic designers, performers and students to investigate the operations and collective stakes of text and language by way of a shifting array of research topics and contexts.

Interested in the possibilities of open modes of production and the social life of the book, Lengerer and the workshop participants worked together to edit and publish an “exhibition script” in three separate editions became each exhibition’s guidebook.

Response by Public recordings, New Dramatics: an editorial meeting

² In Response, critics and scholars are invited to examine the gallery's exhibitions from the standpoint of their practice and research. Focusing on a suite of works, a single artist, the overall curatorial proposal or the exhibition design and taking on a variety of forms according to the guest and their approach, these critical readings set out alternate angles and reference points from which to return to the exhibition and the gallery's programming

New Dramatics' format places two unpublished texts together with a commissioned essay that crosses the distance between them. Zine-making, unsurprisingly, shares a procedural resemblance to rehearsing.

Organizing curator: Michèle Thériault

Realised as part of the Leonard & Bina Ellen Program in Support of Artistic Production

Prompted by an invitation from Michèle Thériault, Sophie Bélair Clément and Marie Claire Forté question the impulse to move within the local context of the exhibition and beyond. Together, they work on the idea of being called upon, as well as the shifts and rifts in subjectivity produced by performance imperatives. They consider visibility and its limitations within an exhibition project that engages a constellation of voices, works and events through the contribution of guests.

This project offered responses that would manifest differently were they to be presented elsewhere, were they to have a different address or context. Embracing a process of dialogue between a reduced community of peers and friends, the works are articulated through lived experience. The task of giving an account of oneself calls for unending reframing and updating.

The exhibition included a series of performances by Marie Claire Forté and Alanna Kraaijeveld, screenings of Chantal Akerman and K8 Hardy's films as well as a reading from writer and poet Catherine Lalonde.

The history of Indigenous Peoples performing for international and colonial audiences is an important part of Indigenous art generally, and performance art specifically. The Indigenous performers faced the conundrum of maintaining traditional cultural practices by performing them on stage while also having that performance fulfill the desires of a colonial imaginary. In Sovereign Acts II, the artists contend with the legacy of colonial actions and representations. Their work returns to the multi-levelled history of 'Performing Indian' to recuperate the erased and objectified performer as an ancestor, an artist, and an Indigenous subject. It also means there are Indigenous traditions of performance that feed contemporary art and form an alternative art history.

The artists in Sovereign Acts II are not just defining themselves from in/outside colonial histories but also from within ever-changing traditions of family, home, people, and territory. Performance is an act of cultural and political resistance as well as of remembrance and commemoration. It offers glimpses of a forgotten past, and uses creative fiction as a force against colonial narratives of capture, savagery, loss and disappearance. A truly Sovereign Act.

Augmented version of an exhibition first produced and presented in 2012 at the Justina M. Barnicke Gallery, University of Toronto.

RESEARCHING CONTEMPORARY INDIGENOUS ART IN PUBLIC

Monday, January 30, 5 pm – 7 pm

Richard W. Hill, Canada Research Chair, Indigenous Studies, Emily Carr University of Art and Design, Vancouver. Since 2015, Richard Hill has been conducting research toward a book on Contemporary Indigenous Art from 1980 to 1995. In March 2016, he began a regular column on the Canadian Art website, a forum where he could "think out loud in public about questions and controversies arising" from this research. This talk will simultaneously address the primary motivations for researching this period, why he has attempted to make parts of the research process public in advance of the completion of the book and what it has been like to do so.

RESPONSE: CRITICAL COMMENTARY BY LINDSAY NIXON

Tuesday, February 14, 5:30 pm

In a recent text for Canadian Art, critic and curator Richard William Hill asks: "Was Indigenous art better in the 1980s and early '90s?" Similar ventures into canonizing Indigenous art have led a new generation of artists and visual historians to rejoin: better for whom? The 1980s and 1990s were a dead period for Indigenous queer, trans, and two-spirit art. This is not only an issue of representation, but also an issue of Indigenous governance and a sign of unbalanced relations. Whose identities have we allowed in the gallery and who have we not? Dayna Danger and Adrian Stimson are two of the many Indigenous artists who are creating from their bodies, genders, and sexualities like never before in Indigenous art histories. Danger and Stimson boldly resist the boundaries of what we consider to be Indigenous art, restoring their beings, bodies, genders, sexualities, and reproductive lives from colonial institutions through play, self-representation, and sexual self-determination.

SIGHTINGS 2016-2017

Launched in 2012, the SIGHTINGS satellite exhibition program was conceived as an experimental platform to critically reflect upon the possibilities and limitations of the modernist "white cube". For the 2015-16 programming year, artists and curators were invited to examine more closely the invisible mechanisms that condition the production and circulation of art, and to propose new strategies to present them to the public. Focused on the notion of labour and the issues raised by an "immaterial" cultural economy, the projects investigated aspects of the art system that are usually overlooked by viewers. Among these: the distribution of roles among art world protagonists (curators, artists, technicians, assistants, programmers etc.); the tensions that govern their respective activities; and the division of labour (between manual and intellectual work, between conception and making, and between creative and discursive production).

For the 2016-17 academic year the projects address the question of pedagogy, considered as a critical interface between the university, arts venues and social space.

SIGHTINGS is located in the ground floor of the Hall Building at 1455 de Maisonneuve Blvd. West

SIGHTINGS 16: TERRARIUM

A project by Catherine Lescarbeau

Catherine Lescarbeau, Terrarium (installation detail), 2016. Photo: Catherine Lescarbeau

Through a provisional analysis of the plants placed in the exhibition space during the installation of the N.E. Thing Co. Environment exhibition at the National Gallery of Canada in 1969, I developed a post-conceptual artistic practice that questions the role of plants in institutions and, more specifically, their possible use as a means to explore art's institutional boundaries. [...] The plant enables me to create a sort of thinking interface to innovatively explore the relationship between culture and nature that arises in corporate, institutional and art workspaces. The Département des plantes de bureau (Department of Office Plants) that I have created in response to the N.E. Thing Co. project, in a sense provided a framework for the kind of investigation I seek to undertake concerning the indoor plant.

OTHER ACTIVITIES FOR THE PUBLIC / PUBLIC PROGRAMS:

TOUR with Catherine Lescarbeau and the botanist François Lambert

Thursday, April 7, 12 pm (in French)

After a brief discussion around the SIGHTINGS cube, in which a sample of plants from different areas of the university was displayed, the two collaborators gave a guided tour of the surrounding buildings where there are other natural and artificial specimens that are also relevant to the project. The merging of artistic and botanical perspectives enriched the understanding of this interdisciplinary project and stimulated a reflection on the relationships between nature and culture as they are articulated in the academic institution.

SIGHTINGS 17: THE TIME OF WORK

A project by Nicolas Grenier

Nicolas Grenier, The Time of the Work, 2016. Installation view. Courtesy of the artist and the participants. Photo: Leonard & Bina Ellen Art Gallery, Concordia University

The Time of the Work proposes an artwork acquisition system that involves neither money nor any utilitarian currency. Rather than a monetary value established according to a speculative logic, it is the subjective time required for the production of a given work that determines the terms of its transaction. As part of this project, several participants have committed themselves to spending a certain amount of time inside the SIGHTINGS cube with an artwork they wish to acquire. The duration of their presence in the cube is equivalent to the time the artist estimates to have devoted to the work's production. Moreover, provided with only a set of paper and pencils, participants carry out this process without a cell phone, tablet, computer, book or other communication, entertainment or work device. The thoughts jotted down during this experience are subsequently given to the artists in exchange for their work.

SIGHTINGS 18: THIS IS A □ TO BE COMPLETED AT HOME

A project by Maude Johnson and Didier Morelli

From left to right: Didier Morelli, This is a □ to be completed at home, 2016. Installation view. Photo: Hugues Dugas and Katrie Chagnon. Courtesy of the artist

The exhibition Ceci est un □ à compléter chez soi: This is a □ to be completed at home presents Didier Morelli's performative research based on the work Teaching and Learning as Performing Arts by French Fluxus artist and economist, Robert Filliou. Since this work takes on many forms and variations, Morelli focused on the eponymous original publication from 1970 and a video recording produced in 1979 as part of a performance at the artist-run centre Western Front in Vancouver. In the fall of 1980 the video was shown at Véhicule Art Inc. in Montreal. After the dissolution of the Montreal artist-run centre in 1983 its archival fonds were acquired by Concordia University. More recently, the university appropriated the history of the centre, incorporating it into its promotional material in the form of panels underlining the link between the foundation of Véhicule Art and Concordia University in the area around the EV building on Guy Street. Based on the idea of an alternative pedagogy via the performative act, Filliou's work thus returns to the institution.

ACTIVITIES FOR THE PUBLIC / PUBLIC PROGRAMS: CONTRIBUTION TO THE INSTITUTE OF (IM)PERMANENT CREATION

Tuesday, September 13, 2016, 5 - 8 pm

The public is invited during this event to donate a yellow object of his/her choice, which will be used by the artist during his performance and integrated within the subsequent installation. Yellow refers to the colour of the cover of the book Teaching and Learning as Performing Arts (1970), on which Morelli's project is based. Referring to Filliou's methodology, this collaborative process aims to create an ephemeral collection of miscellaneous objects that will serve as entry points to various learning situations.

SIGHTINGS 20: SOUVENIRS FROM THE JASMINE CAFÉ

A project by Karen Tam

Karen Tam, Souvenirs from the Jasmine Café, 2017. Photo: Karen Tam

In Souvenirs from the Jasmine Café, I revisit my long-time interest in the Chinese restaurant and propose an installation display of objects and documents from my collection of Chinese restaurant memorabilia that date from the 1920s to the 2000s along with newer restaurant 'artifacts' and souvenirs I have created. The North American Chinese restaurant is a fertile ground for the investigation of issues concerning race, the politics of display and representation. It is a living archive and collection of food, conceptions, images, and objects produced and consumed by those who work and/or eat there. The evolution of these establishments can be charted through their associated ephemera as they have adapted to suit shifting tastes over the decades.

FUTURIST MYTHS

Saturday, September 24, 2016

Artists: Noor Abed, Kristin Li, Malena Szlam, Dylan Mira, Basel Abbas & Ruanne Abou-Rahme, Cauleen Smith

Curator: Nasrin Himada

Video screening followed by a conversation with artist Juan Ortiz-Apuy

Futurist Myths is inspired by the ways in which artists construct myths as well as manipulate and transform existing ones through a poetic imaginary expressed in the filmic form. These films are futurist myths because they fracture the movement of time and attend to the instant at its most intimate formulation. Myths are the foundation of cultural histories and folkloric tales; they tell a people's collective story. Futurist myths, on the other hand, come to tell the story of time and collectivity differently—of a history that is not yet past—by remaining loyal to the present and expressing the fictive power of cultural traditions. They invent, compose, re-imagine; they contextualize the unexpected; they form new images and access affects in new languages. They're futurist because they're transformative: time is dislodged from linearity, and narrative from history.

UNDERGRADUATE ORIENTATION EVENT

Artist-run Rendez-vous

October 6, 2016

Organized by the Faculty of Fine Arts

The Ellen Gallery hosted the annual orientation activity, Artist-run Centre Rendez-vous, for new students in the Faculty of Fine Arts. This activity allows for Artist-run Centres and other non-profit arts organizations to share information, madates and programming to new students. Participating galleries and artist-run spaces included Articule, Dazibao, Eastern Bloc, La Centrale, Libraire Formats, Artexte, RCAAQ, Skol, Studio 303, Studio XX, Montreal Arts Interculturels (MAI), OBORO, and from Concordia University the FOFA and VAV Galleries as well as undergraduate art student organizations, Art Matters Festival, Fine Arts Reading Room, and the Fine Arts Student Alliance (FASA).

Curatorial Workshop held by the Gallery for Art Matters Festival curators
January 13, 2017

Art Matters is a non-profit festival that has existed since 2000 in Montreal,

Quebec. By now, it's been called the largest student run art festival in North America, and its home is Concordia University. Art Matters is created by and for undergraduate Concordia University students. Art Matters gets people together, encourage students from different artistic practices to exchange ideas, promote diverse artistic approaches, processes, and risk-taking. Art Matters strives to be inclusive, encourages accessibility and diversity.

Living Knowledge: "Indigenizing Course Content: How can our pedagogy shift in response to the TRC?"

Hosted by Office of Community Engagement

February 7, 2017

The Living Knowledge community of practice brings together faculty and staff who share a passion for community engaged scholarship, with the goal of creating connections, sharing ideas and strengthening our collective practice. Students, community organizers and representatives from other universities are also welcome.

When it was published in 2015, the Final Report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada sent ripples across the country. In it, the authors asked the important question, "Now that we know about residential schools and their legacy, what do we do about it?" In the face of the significant truths presented in this report, what steps can staff and faculty at Concordia take towards reconciliation? What tools and resources do we need to facilitate our response? Several of the 94 Calls to Action outlined in the report link to the mandate of post-secondary institutions, particularly those surrounding education for reconciliation. Recognizing the importance and magnitude of this work, this community of practice gathering will focus on the ways in which we can integrate indigenous voices, knowledge and leaders into our teaching. What impact can this have and how can it be achieved? What fears and hesitations hold each of us back? Most importantly, when we partner with community members on our efforts to respond to the TRC, how can we ensure that we do so in a way that is both meaningful and mutually beneficial?
